The potato markets have firmed from the lower levels earlier this spring. Food service demand is slowly improving, and stocks remain historically and seasonally low due to the short harvest last fall. Typically, the potato markets are firm into at least late-August. Notable potato price relief may not occur until then. The avocado markets have firmed during the last week. History suggests that the avocado markets could be steady to higher for the month of June. Still, lackluster food service demand could temper any notable upside potential.
