

Tomato supplies are improving as the chief harvest areas transition north. Total tomato shipments last week rose 2.5% from the previous week but was still 13% less than the same week a year ago. History suggests that tomato prices could move even lower in the near term. The five-year average move for the mature green large tomato market during the next two weeks is a decline of 17%. History also suggests that tomato prices could rebound thereafter. Avocado imports from Mexico were strong last week. However, it's possible that Mexican supplies could become thin again this summer.
